

Research Intern/Volunteer

Author, sports book, seeks UNPAID Intern/Volunteer Researcher

April 5, 2013

Veteran journalist who has covered sports at Sports Illustrated magazine, the National Basketball Association (NBA), the United States Olympic Committee, Callaway Golf Media Ventures and CBS Sports is writing a book on the career of English football player, David Beckham that will be published in 2014.

Interns needed to contribute editorial and photo research, publicity and fact-checking.

Contribute research documents, notes and including interviews ... NO Pay.

Create social media and publicity campaigns including scheduling events ... NO Pay.

Opportunity to have your name forever linked with a book about David Beckham ... PRICELESS!

Must be intelligent, resourceful and hardworking. Prefer journalism students with previous experience writing and researching.

Hours: Will vary between 10 to 20 per week

Length: Can start immediately and will run through end of Aug.

As an Intern/Volunteer: You will receive credit for your work with your name being listed in the published book. You may receive letters of recommendation. Opportunities could range from interviewing subjects, arranging and attending press events, as well as working on special projects as they arise. You will gain 'real life' experience for all the steps, from beginning to end, in what it takes to publish a book.

*School course credits may be available based on your college policy.

To Apply: Please send brief note why you are interested in the job along with your resume to:

Bbook2014@gmail.com

Interviews by phone or Skype will be scheduled.